

OREGON'S SUPPORT PERSON LAW FOR PATIENTS AND FAMILIES

Patients with disabilities have a right to support persons while they are in any Oregon hospital. The patient may choose at least three support persons to help with the patient's care, including:

- Communicating with hospital staff
- Making medical decisions
- Providing care needs related to activities of daily living

The Oregon support person law also allows:

- At least one support person can be with the patient at all times in the emergency department and during the entire hospital stay.
- Patients with disabilities may pick support persons to stay with them in the hospital when necessary to accommodate their disability.
- Unless a patient states otherwise, a hospital must ensure a support person is present for any discussion when the patient is asked to make an end-of-life decision. A patient's legal guardian or authorized representative must be included in those discussions.

A hospital can require a support person to follow hospital safety protocols including wearing personal protective equipment provided by the hospital and restricting physical access if the support person is sick or has flu-like symptoms.

If you need a support person based on your disability, please bring it to the attention of your nurse, a nurse leader or a hospital patient advocate. Allow the hospital to quickly resolve your concern about access to a support person.
